Being Mortal builds a bridge between people who face terminal illness and the doctors who care for them. The film illustrates the value of a patient’s personal choice, decision-making, and the need for discussing them with a physician to ensure the medical care received is responsive to the desires of the patients and their families.

After each screening of this thought provoking documentary, attendees will be able to explore what they learned and how to take control of their own health care decisions.

All are welcome, admission is free and refreshments will be served. All attendees will receive a gift card and be entered to win a prize in a raffle drawing. Attendees are encouraged to share this invitation with family, friends, co-workers, and peers.

These screenings are presented by the East Bay Conversation Project (a project of the Alameda-Contra Costa Medical Association (ACCMA) Community Health Foundation) and funded by a grant from the California Health Care Foundation (CHCF).

Members of the public are encouraged to register for these screenings in advance and may do so online at www.EastBayACP.org/events.
